MOKENA CHURCH IS 75 YEARS OLD

St. John's Evangelical Congregation To Hold Diamond Jubilee

Members of St. John Evangelical Church of Mokena are preparing to celebrate the Diamond Jubilee or 75th anniversary of the church in a special manner with special services on Sunday, October 3. The order of services and special programs of the day will be announced later. This congregation was founded in the early days of the settling of this territory.

The first families who came from the old European countries to settle in the village of Mokena, came in the early part of 1842. They were German, Swiss and Swedish people. Thrifty, honest and God fearing folk who sought a land of freedom, and a chance to advance and progress in life thru the hard labor of their hands.

A class of pious people had been developed to whom religion was a very important and vital factor.

The hardships to secure a livelihood for themselves and their loved ones did not separate them from the thought and longing to have a church in their midst where they could worship God and where His word could be taught and preached to them and their children. The organization of St. John's church took place on March 1, 1862, at a meeting held in the school house in Mokena. Rev. Wm. Meyer who had charge of the mission work on January 1, 1862 presided at the meeting when St. John's as a church came into existence.

It was called the German United Evangelical St. John's Church of Mokena. During the years that have intervened this congregation has steadily progressed and a number of years ago outgrew the old church home formerly located on the southeast corner of the present village park. St. John's congregation now has a beautiful house of worship. The building is modern in every way and the style is in English-Gothic. The dimensions of the church are 72 ft. by 86 ft. Vitrified brick are laid in white mortar. Lime stone was used for the trimmings. Two towers give an impressive appearance to the edifice.

The larger tower is over 75 ft. high. A red asbestos tile covers the roof and the wood work in the interior of the building is white oak stained dark. The walls are plastered with a gray sand finished plaster and the furniture, altar pews and pulpit were designed by the architect also the glass windows. The seating capacity is about 500 but 700 to 750 people have been accommodated on numerous occasions. A pastor's study and a rest room are also on the main floor.

A beautiful painting "Christ the Good Shepherd" was placed in the church to the right of the pulpit. It was donated by Mrs. Bertha Laufer.

In the basement spacious Sunday School class rooms are found, a kitchen, cloak room, heating plant and a stage for entertainments.

The church furniture, altar coverings, draperies, carpets and the equipment of the kitchen and dining room were offered to St. John's by the ladies of the congregation.

The cost of the church is about $60,000. About two-thirds of the entire cost had been assured by donations of members, societies and good friends of St. John's.

Rev. Theodore Haefele is the present pastor. The church council consists of the following officers: President, Lawrence Kohl; Vice president, John Yunker; Sec., Chas. Erickson; Financial sec., Peter Mancke, Jr., and Trustee, Edw. Roemer.

Frankfort Has School Bus Problem

Frankfort is having a school bus transportation problem on its hands and Mayor George Sangmeister states if enough parents are interested in talking the matter over with the bus company officials he will call a special meeting so the matter can be talked over.

The difficulty at the present time is the boost in the monthly fare from $4 per month to $5 per month. The tickets are only good on the Joliet school bus and if the students have to stay later than the schedule of the school bus, extra fare must be paid.

The school bus is usually very crowded and many parents object to this. Mayor Sangmeister has had this matter up with the Inter-state Commerce Commission and the Commission has taken the matter up with the Gold Star Bus Line which operates the busses thru Frankfort.

"We the People" And Our Constitution By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman Sentinels of the Republic

"WE THE PEOPLE of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

That, as every one knows, is the Preamble of our famous Constitution, whose 150th anniversary America now celebrates.

To a world accustomed to rule by kings or favored cliques, the American Constitution must have seemed both startling and impractical when signed at Philadelphia's historic Independence Hall, on September 17, 1787.

But today we know its worth. History, and the unprecedented development of the United States in area, in prestige, and in the progress of all its people, has demonstrated how effective a form of government was established on that firm foundation.

Today it stands an object of reverence by all Americans; a model of freedom to the oppressed of all nations.

At this time of nation-wide celebration, America pays tribute not to the Constitution alone, but also to the men who out of their experience and their aspirations for a free and happy nation wrote that famous Charter of Liberty.

But such tribute, however sincere, is not enough. The strength and power of the Constitution depend on the support of every successive generation to which it guarantees liberty and opportunity.

Only by that support have we remained in the past, and can we remain in the future, a government of the people, by the people and for the people.

Only by that support can we the People continue to rule.

That is the message and the spirit of the Constitution Day Celebration.

UNC' BILLY WISHES HE HAD STAYED AT HOME

WHATEVER possessed Unc' Billy Possum to go wandering off way, way into the deepest part of the Green Forest, he did not know himself. He just went, that was all. Perhaps it was something in the air that made him. It seemed as if everybody was doing a great deal of wandering about these beautiful early spring days. It's a way the little meadow and forest people have in the glad springtime. So you will meet them in the most unexpected places, very busy doing nothing at all but looking around.

"How Did Yo' Pass the Winter, Br'er Beaver?" Asked Unc' Billy.

So Unc' Billy Possum wandered along poking over sticks and piles of leaves, peering with his shrewd, sharp little eyes into every hollow log and stump, and watching for signs of nest builders, for you know Unc' Billy has a weakness for fresh eggs. He just can't pass a fresh egg no matter who it belongs to. He always excuses himself on the ground that whoever laid it can lay another, and so no harm is done, which, of course, is no excuse at all. But Unc' Billy seems to think it is, and whenever he goes out to walk in the spring he has his eyes open for new homes of his feathered neighbors.

This particular morning he had come as far as the pond of Paddy the Beaver before he stopped to rest. There he sat down on Paddy's dam to pass the time of day with Paddy, who was swimming about in his pond just as if he hadn't anything else in particular to do.

"How did yo' pass the winter, Br'er Beaver?" asked Unc' Billy.

"Very comfortably, thank you, Unc' Billy," replied Paddy politely.

"I had plenty to eat, a comfortable bed, and plenty of time to sleep. What more could I ask?"

Unc' Billy grinned "Yo' could have asked for warmer weather," said he. "Ah done thought Ah was going to freeze to death. Ah done wish a good many times that Ah was way down souf in Ol' Virginny. Ah don't like such a long, cold winter."

"Did you call that a long winter and a hard winter?" exclaimed Paddy. "Pooh! You ought to spend a winter up where I came from. I don't believe that Mistress Spring has reached there yet."

"Then Ah don't want to be any nearer to it than I am this very minute!" declared Unc' Billy. "By the way, Br'er Beaver, have yo' seen any strangers up this way? Br'er Jay and Br'er Crow done go crazy in their haid, Ah guess, for all they can talk about is a big black stranger who stands on two legs and walks on four legs and is as big as Farmer Brown's Boy. They say they saw him somewhere up around here. Have yo'—"

Unc' Billy didn't finish what he had started to ask. He didn't finish because the snapping of a stick behind him made him turn his head. There stood the stranger in black, as big as Farmer Brown's Boy, standing on two legs and with the awfulest big claws Unc' Billy ever had seen! It was all that Sammy Jay had said. Unc' Billy gave a frightened little gasp and shut his eyes tight

"SOME EXCEPTIONS"

"THE Right Word" has presented some thoughts in connection with the compounding of words.

The dictionary gives "some exceptions." Let us see what they are.

The first of two nouns often stands as an adjective under the following conditions:

When the first noun has the sense of "made of"; as silk dress; feather bed; pumpkin pie; stone wall; paper box; stone fence; iron railing.

When the first noun has the sense of "having the shape or the character or quality of"; as, brother officer; fellow citizen; man servant; boy bishop.

When the first noun has the sense of "pertaining to, suitable for, or representing"; as, city officer; district attorney; government employee; railroad supplies; insurance officer; church furniture.

When the first noun has the sense of "characterized by"; as, diamond ring; cylinder press; cupola furnace.

When the first noun has the sense of "situated in, having a character naturally implied from situation or connection"; as, ocean steamer; school etiquette; mountain streams; country gentlemen; society manners.

When the first noun has the sense of "acting in support of, advocating"; as, Jackson voters; silver advocate; prohibition speakers.

When the first noun has the sense of "residing, existing, or originating in, or coming from (a place)"; as New York schools; Florida oranges; Bath brick. These should give the reader some idea of the exceptions to compounding.

CRACKS IN CONCRETE

CONCRETE is likely to crack from settlement and from various other causes. During warm weather, and aside from appearances, this may lead to no harm. In winter, however, water may freeze in the cracks, and then with the expansion that occurs, the cracks will become larger, and the damage is increased. This is especially the case with stucco. What seem to be tiny cracks in stucco may be the beginning of a serious injury.

Cracks in concrete and stucco can be closed with a mixture of 1 part cement and 3 parts clean building sand, with only enough water to make a workable mixture. A patch on the surface will do little or no good. To be effective, the patch must be forced into the crack; and the deeper it goes, the better. Narrow cracks should be widened with a cold chisel to make space for the patch. The edges of the cut should

The Wealth I Possess

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I'VE figured my blessings, I've counted my cares, I've balanced the book of my daily affairs,

A column for credits, a column for debt,

A place for unkindness I cannot forget,

And yet there were pleasures along with the pain,

And seldom a loss but had some little gain.

I find I have more than I ever have known,

Astonished to note all the wealth that I own.

I've figured my blessings but little, I fear;

My cares I have counted each day and each year.

Forgotten the pleasure, the pain I have kept

Forever in mind, ev'ry moment I wept.

The loss I remember, the sorrow recall,

The happiness hardly remember at all,

But now I have taken a balance at last,

The joys and griefs of the present and past.

I've figured my blessings, I've set them apart

In a book I am keeping, the book of my heart.

I need not set down all the trouble and care,

I find I already had written it there.

But I had forgotten the love that is mine—

It took a whole column, the hate but a line.

The joy always greater, the grief always less,

I'm really astonished the wealth I possess.

be rough, so that the patch, in hardening, will lock itself into place. Whenever possible, the cut should be made wider at the bottom than on the surface, to give the effect of a dovetail joint. In applying a patch, the old concrete should be well soaked with water, so that moisture will not be absorbed from the patch. To gain full density, the patch should be kept damp for several days.

Small cracks in stucco can be closed with a mixture of cement and water to the consistency of thick cream. This is put on with a stiff brush, the length of the crack, so that it is worked in. Before patching, the old concrete should be wet with water.

In the case of a crack between a concrete walk and a foundation wall, patching can be with roofing cement. This has the advantage of being elastic, and of keeping the crack closed should the walk shift with movements of the earth. The cement is most easily applied by melting it and pouring it in. It may be necessary to make space for it by cutting out the crack with a cold chisel. This method can also be used for closing a crack between a cellar floor and a side wall.

WOMEN WHO HOLD THEIR MEN
NEVER LET THEM KNOW

No matter how much your back aches and your nerves scream, your husband, because he is only a man, can never understand why you are so hard to live with one week in every month.

Too often the honeymoon express is wrecked by the nagging tongue of a three-quarter wife. The wise woman never lets her husband know by outward sign that she is a victim of periodic pain.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't be a three-quarter wife; take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

Sentinels

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington. — More and more newspapers throughout the country are demanding that the President invoke the terms of the American

Brutal Japan

Neutrality act with respect to the war—undoubtedly though it is—that is raging on Chinese soil. These editorial expressions obviously will have considerable weight and will convince a very great number of American citizens that President Roosevelt ought to invoke the neutrality act and, by so doing, proclaim that Japan is the aggressor. That, in simple terms, is what a presidential announcement of application of the neutrality act would mean.

There probably has never been a brutality comparable to the unspeakable outrage which Japan is committing in China; certainly, never in modern times. It is a stain upon the name of the Japanese people and the smooth working of the Japanese military machine will never be able to offset the hostility which the subjects of the Rising Sun are creating by this display of brutality.

Although the Tokyo government has yet to say it is fighting a war, the Japanese aggression in China is just as much a war as though the United States and Canada had taken up arms against each other and had proclaimed to the world that they were belligerents. The very fact that there has been no declaration of war, however, complicates the situation as regards the United States and Great Britain. Unless these nations, along with some others which have interests in China, are willing to shoulder the responsibility that comes when an outside nation says publicly that two powers are at war, neither nation can afford to endanger its neutral position by saying to the world that Japan is trying to subjugate portions of China.

That is exactly what is happening. In spite of the declaration of the Japanese statesmen that their military machine is only protecting Japanese nationals, the whole affair may be treated as pure hypocrisy—as a movement by the Japanese to gain control of new resources, new land, over which the teeming millions from Japan may run as the hordes of Chinese are displaced. The whole thing shows how long we have been fooled by the persuasiveness of the Japanese statesmen.

You may ask: What can we do about it? The answer is exceedingly difficult. I have a fear that we can do nothing because of the international policies that the United States pursued during the administrations of Presidents Coolidge and Hoover and those that are continuing under President Roosevelt.

Only once in all of those years did the American government speak out firmly concerning the apparent Japanese plans and on that occasion the assistance given the United States by Great Britain and France amounted to little more than a whisper.

So now the patience of a great many people is wearing rather thin. I think also, from what I hear in diplomatic circles, that the British lion has begun to bare his teeth and unsheath his claws. Again, to what purpose I do not know, because the United States and Great Britain thus far have discussed no plan for acting in unison. Certainly, without concerted action between them and including France, little can be accomplished. It does seem that they could get together because of the community of interests but either the United States lacks leadership in the circumstance, or there are some bugs under the British and French chips about which we do not know. I repeat that in the face of Japan's devastating actions and the ever-growing threat of her overlordship in the Far East, these three powers ought to work out an understanding by which they can trim the wings of the Japanese war birds.

As the fighting continues on Chinese soil and as one disturbing act after another is committed by the Japanese, I imagine many persons are going to inquire why the United States does not brave world diplomacy and invoke the neutrality act. In that eventuality, there ought to be a clear understanding of the various implications and results that would flow from such an American action. In the first instance, Japan is now virtually self-sufficient in the matter of munitions. If we declare an embargo against shipment of war materials to the fighting nations, I believe it is generally agreed the action would hurt China more than it would hurt Japan. It would result in cutting off supplies which the Chinese sorely need. Americans are wholly willing to sell supplies to them because, generally speaking, it is apparent that the sympathies of American individuals are with the Chinese even though the government officially remains neutral.

Further, if our President declared that war existed between Japan and China, doubtless Japan would be encouraged to declare war on China formally. In that event the Japanese immediately would establish a naval blockade of the Chinese coast.

In some quarters in Washington, one will hear arguments that the United States ought to continue to keep its hands off the Far East situation. That school of thought takes the position that the United States is not obligated either from a moral standpoint or from the necessity of protecting American interests, to use force in putting Japan back within its own borders.

The basic reason why these thinkers argue against a firm American attitude, however, is that China never has been subjugated. China has been attacked; it has been overrun from many quarters and it is now being overrun again; but it has never been conquered. That sounds like a broad statement but history proves its truth. The Chinese through all of their thousands of years of history have managed to survive and maintain their racial characteristics and traditions. They never have sought additional territory. They have been content to do things in their own way and to absorb Western civilization slowly. In other words, the Chinese have generally allowed human nature to change only as human nature does change through the years.

But what of other world powers? Lately, the Chinese have entered into a treaty with What of Other Powers?

Soviet Russia by which that nation promises not to participate in war against China. The treaty is simple enough and yet what is written there is only a shadow of what it all means. The Soviet, while apparently not desiring to engage Japan in hostilities, is unwilling to see Japan go too far in extending her frontier. It is only a short while since Japan set up the puppet state of Manchukuo. It borders on Russian territory and the feeling along that border has been none too harmonious. It seems quite logical then that the Soviet was desirous of showing to Japan the possibility of an attack from two sides if Japan forces her tentacles too far inland in continental Asia.

Also, it ought to be mentioned that the treaty between the Soviet and China may be influential in Europe. The general understanding is that Hitler has committed Germany to the aid of Japan if the Soviet moves against the island power. Besides this circumstance, the Soviet is unwilling, if one may judge circumstances of the last two years, to encourage the ill will of Great Britain. Dictator Stalin does not want to have Great Britain and France arrayed against him and he can see obviously that Great Britain and France, as well as the United States, must favor China.

Word comes by cable from Paris that the French government has nationalized all of the railroads within the borders of that nation.

Takes Over Railroads
It may be that this news item will be passed over by many persons with the remark that the condition is several thousand miles across the Atlantic. It is, however, a most significant step because France, along with the United States and Great Britain, long has held to the idea that private initiative and private brains always are better than government initiative and government brains.

I call attention to this development for another reason. It happens that about three years ago members of President Roosevelt's so-called Brain Trust were planning exactly the same thing for the United States.

Strangely, the terms by which the French government, which is now completely socialistic, took over the railroads of France are identical with those which were under consideration by the Roosevelt Brain Trust.

It may be news to many persons to learn that the bunch of theorists who infest our government once actually drafted a bill for action by congress to nationalize the American railroads. That bill would have taken over the rail lines for their bonded indebtedness and would have left nothing at all for the stockholders. The French radicals have done exactly that thing in nationalizing the French railroads.

It may be that "It can't happen here," but I must confess a very deep fear. It seems to me the time has arrived for those who believe in ownership of their own homes, possession of their own money—whether the sum be small or large—to awaken to the trend of world events.

'Way Back When

By JEANNE

FROM LUMBER YARD WORKER TO VICE PRESIDENT OF U. S.

TO KNOW whether you have chosen the right vocation for success in return for your efforts is sometimes difficult to decide. But, once it begins to dawn upon you that you could go further in another occupation, it is time to change. The greatest advancement lies where your talents and interests are greatest. Charles Dawes, who made the under-slung pipe famous when he became Vice President of the United States, might have been relatively unknown if he had not changed his mind about the occupation he would follow.

He was born in Marietta, Ohio, in 1865. He attended the public schools there and entered Marietta college, graduating at the age of nineteen. During the summer months he worked in a lumber yard, shifting lumber. It is easy to imagine that without vision and analysis, he might have set the proprietorship of a lumber yard as his goal. Dawes was always fond of music. He played both the violin and the piano, and music has been his chief diversion. He composed "Melody in A Minor" which Fritz Kreisler, famous violinist, included in his repertoire.

After college, Charles Dawes went to work in the engineering department of the Toledo and Ohio Central Extension railroad, working up to chief engineer in charge of construction. He decided to study law, or he might have been simply a good civil engineer. Graduating from the Cincinnati School of Law, he practiced for some years and became interested in politics. President McKinley appointed him comptroller of currency and, after four years of service, Dawes organized the Central Trust company of Chicago. He was general purchasing agent for the A. E. F. during the World war, and director of the budget bureau under President Harding. In 1924, he was elected Vice President of the United States under Coolidge.

FAMOUS AVIATRIX ONCE DROVE A TRUCK

THIS is a note of encouragement for "tom-boys" and particularly for parents who may not understand them. Girls who fall into the classification of "tom-boys" usually simply have a stronger spirit of competition or a greater streak of adventure than other little girls. Their greater activity may be early expression of a sense of leadership which may later lead to fame.

Amelia Earhart, queen of aviation, was a tom-boy. Born in Atchison, Kan., in 1898, she was an unusually active little girl. She loved rough and tumble games, and she could beat most of the boys her age in sports and contests. She graduated from Hyde Park high school in Chicago and went on to a girl's school in Rydal, Pa. From school she went to Canada where she worked as a nurse's aide in a Toronto war hospital. Stories of World war pilots appealed to her sense of adventure and daring; and Amelia made her way to California, determined to learn to fly.

Here her self-reliance and "tom-boy" courage was helpful, for she had to earn the money for her instruction. Amelia Earhart worked for the telephone company and even drove a sand and gravel truck. Later, she attended Columbia university. She held 28 different jobs while perfecting herself in the art of flying. In 1923, she won the plaudits of the world by being the first woman to fly the Atlantic. As a result of this flight she gained recognition as the foremost woman flyer, became aviation editor of Cosmopolitan Magazine, and vice president of two important commercial airlines.

They're Not All Professors—Those Absent-Minded Ones

Absent-mindedness isn't confined to the professors, says the Commentator.

The late Dwight W. Morrow once telephoned his secretary from Philadelphia, to inquire, "What am I in Philadelphia for?"

Secretary Henry A. Wallace, when he was in Czechoslovakia, packed his passport in a trunk that was shipped to London, while he set off in the opposite direction.

And J. David Stern, publisher of the New York Post and Philadelphia Record, was hurrying along the street when he met a friend. "Come on and have lunch with me," the friend said.

"If we go nearby," Stern said. "I'm late as it is."

They entered the nearest restaurant and sat down. Stern complained that he didn't know what was the matter with him, he didn't seem to be hungry.

"Beg pardon, sir," the waiter said, "but it's no wonder, sir. You just finished your lunch about ten minutes ago."

Clouds Pass By

The clouds I feared and worried about, and concerning which I wanted so much precious strength, lost their frown and revealed themselves as my friends. Other clouds never arrived—they were purely imaginary, or they melted away before they reached my threshold.—J. H. Jowett.

Helper of Humanity

He who helps a child helps humanity with a distinctness, with an immediateness, which no other help given to human creatures in any other stage of their human life can possibly give again.—Phillips Brooks.

A Great Motto

ONE of America's great business organizations has adopted a motto for the guidance of its people—a little five-letter word with a big meaning. It has been cut in huge granite letters over the entrance of a recently constructed building used as a training school. It is made the theme of many employee discussions. It hangs over the desk of company executives. The word is THINK.

Educators, philosophers, preachers throughout the ages have written and talked about it. Rodin gave the world a famous statue called "The Thinker." "Think" is a significant word. It represents the only means by which human progress can be accomplished. It annoys people who have lazy minds, because thinking means mental effort. Practically all the accidents in the world are caused because people don't think. Thousands fail in life simply because they don't think. Others give great inventions to the world because they do think.—The Pick-Up.

a Safety Tip FOR YOUR WEEK-END TRIP

TAPPING RUBBER TREES ON FIRESTONE PLANTATIONS IN LIBERIA

From the Firestone plantations in Liberia comes an ever-increasing supply of the world's finest rubber. Money saved here and in manufacturing and distribution enable Firestone to sell a safer, first-quality tire at lower prices.

Here's Why FIRESTONE STANDARD TIRES GIVE YOU MORE FOR YOUR MONEY

DON'T take chances on your Week End trip. Protect yourself and family by equipping your car with a set of new first-quality Firestone Standard Tires. Firestone builds extra quality and extra safety into these tires and sells them at lower prices because Firestone controls rubber and cotton supplies at their sources, manufactures with greater efficiency and distributes at lower cost.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST BLOWOUTS

—eight extra pounds of rubber are added to every 100 pounds of cord because every fiber of every cord in every ply is saturated with liquid rubber by the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping Process. This counteracts the internal friction and heat that ordinarily cause blowouts.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST PUNCTURES

—because there are two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST SKIDDING

—because the tread is scientifically designed.

YOU GET LONGER NON-SKID MILEAGE

—because of the extra-tough, long-wearing tread.

You need all of these features to make your car tire-safe on your Week End trip. Firestone gives them to you at lower cost. Join the Firestone SAVE A LIFE Campaign today by equipping your car with a set of new Firestone Standard Tires—today's top tire value.

DON'T RISK YOUR LIFE ON SMOOTH WORN TIRES!

DO YOU KNOW

THAT last year highway accidents cost the lives of more than 38,000 men, women and children?

THAT a million more were injured?

THAT more than 40,000 of these deaths and injuries were caused directly by punctures, blowouts and skidding due to smooth, worn, unsafe tires?

At right is section cut from a new Firestone tire. Note the thick, non-skid protection against skidding, blowouts and punctures. Come in and see by actual demonstration.

At left is a section cut from a smooth, worn tire, with non-skid protection worn off. Tires in this condition are liable to punctures, blowouts and skidding.

Select Hybrid Seed Corn With Personel Knowledge

One of our advertisers in this issue is requesting all those interested in hybrid corn to visit and inspect the fields in which the seed is being grown as a means, not only of familiarizing the farmer user with the growing of the seed from which his next year's corn crop will spring, but to more particularly enable him to safeguard himself against carelessness or abuses, that, if permitted by the seed grower, would result in a lower performance and yield of the corn when grown the following year by the farmer.

The whole hybrid seed corn practice is in its infancy and now is the time to institute and make customary methods and practices that are to the best interests of the farmer grower. Although hybrid seed corn has only been in use for a few years, disappointments have already occurred which might have been avoided had there been a better understanding on the farmer user's part. The inspection of a field jointly with others similarly interested would bring to your attention features that you should notice and would also guide you in selecting seed in future years. So much particularly is required in the growing of seed corn that it is likely to be a special business where every other farm interest is subordinated to the one seed enterprise, rather than become a small sideline project on many farms.

When on such an inspection many things are to be noted. Among these is isolation from other corn. Corn pollen grains carry considerable distance and rules of distance from other corn have been worked out.
Perfect isolation is forty rods but when foreign corn is within less distance relative numbers of barrier rows of pollinator corn are required to make sure that the only pollen that fertilizes the seed line comes from the particular pollinator corn that is used. Where foreign corn corners with a seed tract, instead of alongside, the same rules apply, and if pollinator barrier rows are omitted their absence means that the hybrid character of seed is ruined and it should not be used as hybrid seed.

Farmers do not need inspectors nor certificates of inspection for these simple facts when they have the opportunity nearby of inspecting the fields wherein their seed may be grown. Where farmers indulge in the practice of field inspection, attempts to evade the rules will cease.

Detasseling is one operation, however, that takes place at a particular season when the farmer is too busy or cannot, as a matter of practicality, inspect, hence, an inspection service for this particular operation is needed and is supplied by the hybrid seed growers association and the crop improvement association.

Hybrid seed corn should be grown on soil of sufficient fertility, particularly high in phosphorus, to not only completely mature the seed, but to have sufficient plant food within each kernel to quickly establish the new seedling in the soil and to overcome seedling period of soil and climate hardships. An abundance of phosphorus in the embryo of the kernel will give the new cycle of life that desirable kick-off with which we like to see the new seedling started. A few days more gained in the seedling stage with the desirable plant food in the kernel that gives us high seedling vigor will often be the few days of advanced growth that completes maturity before frost ends the growing season. To know of your own knowledge that your seed is grown with high phosphorus advantage outweighs label and tag assurances.

Non-competition of weeds is also a factor in the deposition of plant food within the kernel for the new seedling, and particularly in the dry years, when the amount of protein and starch that operate as food for the seedling may be limited because of water stolen from the maturing corn plant by weed competition. Where maturing growth of the corn proceeds without interruption or competition the kernels are full and uniformly formed and shaped, which best affords the greater percentage of edgedrop size kernels. We can recall how the half starved ears have tip shaped kernels from the middle of the ear to the tip, and how the abundantly well matured ear has regularly shaped kernels nearly to the end of the ear.

An examination of seed fields at this time best gives the prospective buyer an understanding of the kind of seed he can expect from a given field and the reliance he can place upon it.

Hybrid No. 366 is being grown. These are on the Lincoln High-

Field Days are Saturday September 18, Tuesday September

Come early before frost may force early husking and the sending of the corn to the drying kilns. The purpose of the visitation discount certificate plan is to encourage and institute the practice of inspection of seed fields by farmer purchasers of hybrid seed. This will enable you to note the care required in production and the practices that increase the seed value to you, particularly, nearness or absence of open pollinated fields, which may ruin the hybrid value, but which cannot be detected by seed bag inspection or any other method than seed field visitation and inspection.

"So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." Romans 14:12. Dear reader—read it this way: "I shall give account of myself to God." Now just let that thought sink into your heart. Say it over again to yourself. "I am to give an account of myself to God."
Are you ready to do that? Prepare to meet thy God. Today is the day of salvation. Today is the day to start working for Him.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Substance" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, September 12.

The Golden Text was, "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty" (1st Chronicles 29:11).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him. That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past" (Ecclesiastes 3:14, 15).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:
"Things spiritual and eternal are substantial. Things material and temporal are insubstantial" (p. 335).

"By the Side of Road"

There's a little white cottage
So cozy and neat.
It snuggles just yonder
On our side of the street.

The roof, all in green
Through the Poplars I see.
The windows like silver
Are shining and clean.

There's a row of red cherry trees
Lining the road
That leads to door of My dear friend's abode.

A dog on a chain
Guards the entrance from fear,
And oh! how he prances
When Annie comes near.

There's a vegetable garden
At the end of the drive Taken care of by Jim
With love and with pride.

The tomatoes, potatoes and
All things to eat
He raises himself for His friends as a treat.

Luscious big strawberries,
Asparagus too,
Are some of the good things
That he can produce.

With all garden makers,
You by chance come to meet,
Good Jim is ready
With his hoe to compete.

There are roses and peonies,
Quite near to the well
That you pump with a handle
And this you may tell.

No water more sparkling,
No water more cool
To soothe the tired body
You'll agree I am sure.

As I gaze in the night
With the moon overhead,
To the little white house,
It's windows aglow

There's a sense of security
Restful, sweet peace
Falls around and about me
To quiet and please.

May Valley View Farm
And its occupants there
Be protected from harm
Is my earnest prayer.

"IT LOOKS THE SAME BUT THERE'S A DIFFERENCE!"

"DURING the depression we felt we ought to cut expenses everywhere. We didn't want to give up our telephone entirely, so we changed to a party line. And it was very satisfactory, considering everything. I haven't any complaint to make about it at all.

"But how nice it is to have an individual line again! It's our own telephone now. No one uses it except ourselves. There are no delays waiting for other people to finish talking. And it costs only a few cents a day more than the party line did. John wonders why we waited this long to change back."

Wouldn't you like the added convenience and privacy of an individual telephone line? Any of our Business Offices will gladly arrange to make the change for you.

Benefit Game For Larry Stebar

The Will County Farm Bureau baseball team will play on Sunday, Sept. 26 on the Manhattan field for the special benefit of Larry Stebar, center fielder on the Farm Bureau nine, who was injured in the state championship game at Urbana at the Sports Festival on September 4.

Larry had been playing fine ball all season and was playing a grand game against Ogle county at Urbana when on a slide to second base he injured his ankle so severely that it was necessary to place it in a cast in which it will have to remain for approximately a month. This has placed Larry's wife and baby in a tough spot, since it will lay him out of work for that long or longer.

The final arrangements have not been made with a team to play the Farm Bureau on that date, but an additional announcement will be made of the game next week. An effort is being made to secure a team which will furnish an even match in order that a strong game can be promised and it is hoped that there will be a large crowd on hand to enjoy the game and furnish some help for Larry, which will be quite a boon.

How Electricity Eliminates Drudgery From N. Ill., Farms

Electrification of Illinois farms largely has removed all drudgery, according to a survey released this week by the Illinois Manufacturer's Association.

"No longer does the Illinois farmer and his family need to complain of the endless toil that in the past largely was the cause for migration of much of the farm population to the city," says the statement.

"In Northern Illinois is a great many arm homes which are supplied not only with modern electric lighting in residences, barns and all other buildings but with electric water pumps, water heaters, milkers, brooders, washers, ranges and refrigerators.

"Many a farmer's kitchen is as well supplied with electric labor saving devices as the most sophisticated Gold Coast maisonette.

"The Public Service Company of Northern Illinois since January 1, 1935, has built 1103 miles of rural electric lines—327 of which were constructed during the first seven months of 1937.

"The total rural units served or adjacent to the lines in this territory on August 1 was 18,415 out of 29,384 units in the territory or 62.7 per cent—an increase of nearly 20 per cent since January 1, 1935. Of this number 4528 rural units were connected since January 1, 1935—1255 during the last seven months.

"Keeping up with the Joneses is a farm trait as well as a city ambition. A farmer's wife wants an electric stove, an electric washing machine, ironers, toasters and fruit juicers quite as much as a radio or electric lights.

"The farmer wants an electric water pump, a miller, a brooder, a dairy water heater and other convenient labor saving machinery. Stimulus to the electrification has been given by practical electrified farms where many of the important jobs are done by electricity and made open for inspection to farmers in the vicinity. These farms are near Kankakee, Cloverdale, Anconia, Cayuga, Gurnee, Dwight and other rural centers in Public Service Company's territory."

"Go on, Maggie. You looked down and then what?"

"I see a swell dressed fella talking to the boss. I couldn't see his face 'cause his hat was pulled low; you know, the kind you see in the classy ads."

"Could you hear what they were saying?"

"No. That window was closed. I open the front one in cold weather, an', gee, has it been cold in that attic!"

"What did you do next?"

"Went back to bed, Inspector."

The girl's voice had cleared. Rising excitement was driving out fear. "I must have gone to sleep again for the next thing I knew I was sitting up straight in bed calling out: 'Who's shootin'?"

"I switched on the light and ran to the front window, and I saw a big car going lickety-split down the road."

The policeman appeared at the door.

"Okay 'bout the back window and garage, Inspector."

"All right, Tim. Stay where you are. What next, Maggie?"

"I stood looking out a minute, thinking that the big car must have back-fired an' what a hick I was to think the sound was shootin' when I'd grown up in a garage, an' then I had a kinder creepy feeling; you know, the kind when they say a rabbit's walkin' over your grave—"

"Don't shiver, Maggie, there won't be nothing walking over your grave for years yet; don't the papers say we're all going to live to be a hundred—barring accidents? Then what?"

"Then I began to wonder what that big car was doing out here in the middle of the night, and then I began to think of hi-jackers an' kidnapers an' bandits till I thought I'd scream, an' then I remembered Mrs. Hunt's rings an' jewelry—she had classy jewelry."

The girl's voice had risen till the last word was shrill with excitement.

Mike Cassidy patted his daughter's shoulder.

"Take it easy, Maggie. Tell the inspector the rest that happened; then I'll take you home to your Ma. Won't I, Bill?"

"Sure, Mike, sure. What did you do after you thought of Mrs. Hunt's diamonds, Maggie?"

"I stuck my feet in slippers an' pulled on my blanket wrapper. I beat it downstairs an' come into this room. It was lighted an' she—she was lying there—just like she is now—an—oh, gee!"

"We're almost through, Maggie," the inspector encouraged. "What did you do when you came into this room and saw—"

"I guess I let out a yell first; then I just flopped to my knees beside her. I didn't touch nothing though; I learned that in the movies. When I saw she wasn't breathing I beat it to the garage, an' I know I yelled then for the boss was on the floor face down, his hands behind him, an' his feet tied. I grabbed his shoulder an' turned him over. There was a big bump on his forehead and his eyes were closed. I shook him. When he didn't say nothing, I rushed to the phone and called Pop. I guess you know the rest." Her lips quivered, and for the first time her eyes filled with tears.

The inspector patted her shoulder. "Good girl, Maggie, just one more question and you can go. Did you hear any rowing between the boss and herself lately?"

"He was nice to her."

"Sure, Maggie, but even folks who think a lot of each other—take your Pa and Ma now—" he winked at Cassidy—"have a cat and parrot fight sometimes, don't they? You know they do. So Mr. and Mrs. had a quarrel, had they? What about?"

The girl twisted her print dress in unsteady fingers.

"It was last evening, late—it's tomorrow now, isn't it? An' she'd been phoning—I was in the kitchen, you can hear plain in this house—an' I heard him say loud: 'What's this about a paper?'"

"I couldn't hear what she said, but he kinder shouted: 'I didn't mind starting this joint to gouge money out of Trent, but what you're planning now is different. It'll be jail for us if we—' The door closed hard an' I didn't hear any more."

"All right, Maggie. Make a cup of strong tea for her in the kitchen, Mike; then take her home." Mike Cassidy put his arm about his daughter as they left the room. Mark Trent watched them out of sight.

"My hat's off to you, Inspector. That girl told you everything she knew without being frightened into it."

The inspector's eagle eyes retreated into bony caverns.

"My boy, 'bout two thousand years ago a Man laid down a rule for living that I ain't never heard improved on. I've got a girl of my own, and all the time I was questioning Maggie I was thinking how I would feel if my daughter'd been mixed up in this mess. Has Hunt come to?" he demanded of an officer who entered. The steel was back in his voice.

"Yes, Inspector, but he's groggy."

"I'll go to the garage. Will you come along, Mark? Cripes, I never can remember to call you Mr. Trent."

"Why should you? Didn't you hand me my first and only summons for speeding? I'll go with you, but you won't leave—" he glanced at the still figure on the floor.

"Tim will stay. The coroner ought to be here any minute now. Come on. I'd like to have you hear what Hunt has to say."

The garage was lighted by one glaring bulb, littered with tools and cans; the floor was patched with oil stains, and the air was strong of gas. On a pile of old times, a man was braced upright against the rough cement wall. He was blond and must have been fine looking before life and dissipation had done cruel things to his face. He opened his eyes as the inspector spoke to him. He tried to smile.

"Another dick? Maggie sure called out the whole police force. 'Twasn't necessary. I'll be all right in a minute."

Didn't the man know what had happened in the house, or was he acting, Mark asked himself. The inspector rolled an empty gas can on its side and sat down.

"Course you'll be all right. As for Maggie calling out the force, she got an awful jolt coming out here an' finding you all tied up like a bundle of old clothes."

Hunt put an unsteady hand to his head.

"Why did the girl come out here at this time of night? She's never done it before." His eyes narrowed. He clenched his hand. "What are you doing here, Trent? You can't get Lola back!"

"Take it easy, Hunt, take it easy. Mr. Trent was with me in Cassidy's garage—I'm Inspector Harrison, in case you don't know—when his daughter phoned that you were hurt. He came along to help. What happened to you, Hunt?"

"Someone beat me up, you can see that, can't you? I was working late, I—I hadn't been feeling well all day and I was making up time, when a man drove up in a roadster and said he had a punctured tire and could I put on a spare. I said, 'Sure, I guess there's no law against my doing that if the old tabbies here won't let me sell gas.' I turned to get my tools, and that's the last I knew until I looked up to see an officer bending over me."

"Who was the man?"

"I don't know, Inspector."

"Ever see him before?"

"No."

"Sure?"

"Sure."

"Go on," prodded the inspector.

"Nothing to go on about. I was blackjacked. I thought the man took a crack at my head, but my feet feel as if they were in iron casts."

"Probably those ropes stopped the circulation. Were you—"

Mark didn't hear the rest of the inspector's question. His eyes were on Hunt's right foot. Between the upper and sole of the unlaced shoe was a faint line of red.

CHAPTER XI

From behind the tea-table in the living-room at Lookout House, Brooke Reyburn watched the sun fling the earth a spectacular good-night.

Mrs. Gregory, in a chair beside the crackling birth fire, set down her cup.

"Is it only two weeks since the tragedy at the filling station?" asked Brooke. "When, last October, I told Jerry Field that I was coming to Lookout House to live, he said: 'What will you do marooned on a rocky point of land in a place where the residents dig in and nothing ever happens?'"

"He can't say that nothing ever happens here now. The days have flown and have left behind them hours smeared with police questioning; men swarming over this house for finger-prints; newspaper front pages shrieking clues which were corrected in the next issue; skating and lots of it; poinsettias in place of chrysanthemums in the conservatory in honor of Christmas. It was such a strange Christmas without Mother, and with Sam absorbed in the production of the play. Now

New Year's has slipped into the limbo of yesterdays, and in 48 hours the curtain will ring up on 'Islands Arise.'"

"I'll be glad when it's over. Your eyes seem tired, Brooke."

"Do you wonder? They have looked at the scum and dregs of the underworld, at pictures in rogue galleries, at line-ups, at patients in hospitals, trying to identify the man who ran through my room."

"I heard that the police were sure that Hunt was the man when red paint was found on his shoe."

"The trouble with that clue was that it wasn't his shoe. When he first regained consciousness in the garage, he complained that his feet felt as if they were in iron casts. Then the police with their steam-shovel methods hurried him into the living room of the white cottage. When he saw what lay on the floor he collapsed. After he was taken to the hospital—he's still in a coma—his shoes had to be cut off. Then it was found that they were a size smaller than his at the cottage. The man whom the Cassidy girl saw in the garage must have changed and taken Hunt's shoes. He was a quick worker."

"Bill Harrison may be smart, but what has he done toward clearing up this tragedy? Nothing."

"He wants the case to drop out of the headlines. He says that the guilty parties will then think that the hunt for them is cooling off."

"I wish they'd put me on the force, I'd show them a thing or two." The brim of Mrs. Gregory's large hat flopped in union with the thump of her cane. "I'm not afraid of bandits. I've ordered some of my jewels from the bank to wear to Sam's play."

"Oh, Mrs. Gregory! Is it safe?"

"Safe! Do you think I'll be frightened out of wearing what I like? Besides, lightning never strikes in the same place twice. Lucky the performance is coming off soon; everybody is getting edgy."

"We'll relax tonight. Mark Trent is giving the Fields and Reyburns a party in town at that new Supper Club. It was planned for two weeks ago but it was postponed. It seems a century since I have been to a real party."

"Mark needs a change of thought too. It's an ill wind that blows nobody good. Lola is out of his life, thank heaven. But, much as I love you, Brooke, I'll never forgive myself for signing my name as witness to Mary Amanda Dane's will which cut him off."

Brooke's mind whirled and steadied. Mrs. Gregory's signature was not on the will which had been probated; she had made sure of that again recently. Perhaps the one to which she referred had been drawn earlier.

"How could you know what you were signing? Witnesses are not supposed to see the contents of a will, are they? When did you witness it?"

Brooke asked the question quickly. She must know and get the uncertainty off her mind.

"Just a week before Mary Amanda died. Perhaps you remember the day. You drove in just as I went out and—good heavens, I forgot! I promised Jed Stewart that I wouldn't mention it. Forget I told you, Brooke. It wasn't very tactful of me anyway, but when was I ever tactful? I like that rust-color gown on you."

Why had Jed Stewart asked Mrs. Gregory not to mention her signature? Did he suspect dishonesty? Why wonder? Hadn't she been sure for weeks that the two men in Mark Trent's house were there for some other reason than sheer love of a New England village in winter?

The thump of Mrs. Gregory's cane brought her mind to attention.

"I've asked you twice, Brooke, if you thought Sam liked Daphne Field."

"He likes her, Mrs. Gregory, but Sam won't allow himself to go sentimental over anyone at present."

"Allow himself! Then he isn't in love. We may be living in a profoundly changing society, but love hasn't changed. It still strikes like lightning, burns, and if it's the real thing, settles into a steady flame. But I'm glad he doesn't care for the Field girl."

She rose and drew her sable cape about her shoulders. "If you are going to town tonight you ought to be dressing. What are you wearing?"

"An adorable silver frock. It does things to my hair, brings out the copper glints in it."

Mrs. Gregory lingered on the threshold. "Be nice to Mark, Brooke. He's a wonderful boy, don't you think so?"

"I'd hardly call him a boy—he's too dictator-minded, but that's the trend. Chacun a son gout—I've joined a French class—I prefer Jerry Field's type."

Mrs. Gregory expressed her reaction by a denatured snort.

"You prefer Jerry Field! I'd like to take you over my knee and spank sense into you! Good-night!"

Brooke laughed.

"Good-night, Mrs. Gregory. Even if you don't approve of me, I hope you'll come again soon."

She was still smiling as she returned to the living-room window for a last lingering look at the colorful west.

"It is unbelievable that all this comfort really is mine," she told herself. "Only a year ago, Brooke Reyburn, you were driving a shabby sedan and counting every penny and—"

CHOICES AND THEIR CONSEQUENCES IN A NATION'S LIFE

LESSON TEXT—Deuteronomy 11:8-12, 26-32.

GOLDEN TEXT—Choose you this day whom ye will serve.—Joshua 24:15.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Our Country.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Choosing Sides.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Importance of Our Choices.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—My Part in Making Up the Nation's Mind.

Nations as well as individuals are responsible before God for the manner in which they live. They enjoy the blessings of right living and suffer the penalty of wrong moral choices. While it is true that national leaders may not always reflect the true character of the people, it is generally true that there is a sort of national character which over a longer period of time accurately represents the moral condition of the people as a whole.

Many earnest men and women believe that the United States of America stands today at the crossroads of national moral decision. There has been an unquestionable decadence of true religion, of home life, of social purity, and a growth of moral indifference and outright wickedness which causes men who think to cry out for a revival of old-fashioned spiritual and moral standards ere it be too late. The most effective, and in fact the only really effective way to bring that about, is a revival within the church of Christ, and a resultant renewal of its service in winning men to Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Lord. A 24-page booklet "Lessons in Soul-Winning," by Dr. Will H. Houghton, will be sent by the writer without charge to those requesting it. If possible enclose a 3 cent stamp.

I. Right Choices Result in Blessing (vv. 8, 9).

Making the right choice is in fact a simple matter, for it means only obedience to God's commandments. God is the author of the moral law. He alone can and does determine what is right and wrong. Man need not determine, nor is he equipped to decide that question. He can and must relate the details of his life to the law of God. How important it is then that he properly understand that law, and what folly it is to neglect the study of God's Word, where the commandments of God are made known unto men.

Choosing God's way means for both men and the nations which they make up (for my country is in the final analysis myself, and other individuals like me) the assurance of God's blessing and prosperity.

II. God Encourages Right Choices (vv. 10-12).

Our God is the great and untiring "giver of every good and perfect gift." We need but to lift up our eyes and look at His handiwork, or stir up our memories to recall His goodness, and we know that He and all His blessed works encourage us to do right—to live right.

But, alas, all too often God's choicest gifts are perverted and are used to bring the very opposite result. The most beautiful lakes and naturally delightful surroundings are used for resorts and clubs which all too often lead men to moral destruction. Parents almost fear that their daughters may be too attractive, for the world, the flesh, and the devil are constantly out "scouting" for beautiful women whose very God-given beauty may be used to glorify sin and lead others into disobedience to God.

III. Right and Wrong Are Fundamental and Eternal (vv. 26-32).

It needs to be repeated over and over again in these callous and indifferent days that there is laid down in the very constitution of the entire universe a moral distinction between right and wrong. Right is always right, and wrong is definitely and eternally wrong. There is no moral twilight zone, where things are neither white nor black, but a neutral gray.

Note that the difference between right and wrong was to be the same "on the other side of the Jordan." Time and place have no power to change moral law. What was right or wrong for your great-grandfather is right or wrong for you. What was right in your home on the farm is right in the city where you now live, or vice-versa. The passing of the years or a change of residence does not alter that law of God.

May God help the people of our nation, and all the countries of the earth, to remember that it is still true that "righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people" (Prov. 14:34).

Here's What to Sew

THIS is not a wishing-page, Miss lady, even though it is from a book of exclusive fashions by Sew-Your-Own! You can run any one of these frocks through your machine in short order. The patterns are so easy to follow (even the simon-pure will say they're simple) and the finished article so exciting you'll be apt to ask yourself, "Why have I waited so long to Sew, sew, sew my own?"

All-Occasion Dress.

Here is one frock that belongs in every woman's wardrobe. You'll look prettier in the kitchen, more comfortable at work—and in your silk crepe version—prettier in afternoon leisure or shopping on the avenue. It is especially easy to sew, too, thank you.

New School Frock.

You cute, little lady of fashion, this is your lucky day. You and Mommy will agree on this dress just like two pals should agree. It buttons down the front, the way you want it to; its waist is snug as big sister's, and all in all it will make you feel the best-dressed girl in the whole assembly. This pattern makes up attractively in either cotton, silk, or light-weight wool.

The Curse of Progress

Subtle Compliment.
"Why did you put the sign over your desk, 'This is my busy day'?"
"It makes a good impression," answered Senator Sorghum, "when an influential constituent calls."
"But it might give offense."
"Not at all. It adds to a visitor's sense of importance when I give him a cigar and tell him I want to have a long chat with him."

Major Repairs
Man—I understand you had a slight operation?
Friend—That's what I thought I had, but I got the bill for it yesterday, and I'm inclined to think now that while I was under the ether the surgeon gave me everything he had in stock.

Skill Recognized.
"How is Josh getting along with the violin?"
"Better'n I expected," replied Farmer Cornstossel. "Time and again it sounds like it was goin' to pieces, but Josh always has the luck to hold it together somehow."

SHOE UNDER BED

By GLUYAS WILLIAMS

DON'T WORK THERE NOW

She—Aren't you the young man who used to work in daddy's office?
He—Nope! He fired me because I didn't work.

MEOW!

"So you're the one who stole my husband, are you?"
"Yes, but from what I've seen of him so far, there's nothing for you to get angry about."

PUZZLED

The Bore—How is it that I see you every summer at this resort?
She—I can't tell, for every time I see you coming I duck.

THE MYSTERY

Wife—Frank, I cannot find my bathing suit anywhere.
Hubby—Maybe you've got it on.

EASY ENOUGH

Mr. J. (angrily)—No man can do two things at once.
Mrs. J.—Wrong again—he can do his duty and his work.

BREEZY VISITOR

"Bill blew into town last night—seen him yet?"
"No; only got wind of his visit just now."

NATURAL HONKS

"The honk, honk, of these motorists makes me sick."
"What else can you expect of the geese!"

Circulating Ducts

These ducts, which are connected to registers, carry the conditioned air into the home.

Automatic Humidifier

The air is humidified automatically by this device. Moist air at 68° feels more comfortable, and warmer than dry air at 75°.

Heating Compartment

Here is where the air is properly warmed by the heavy, gas-tight, long-lived heating element.

Recirculating Air Duct

This duct is connected to Return Air Grilles located in the various rooms of the home and recirculates the air into the unit to be conditioned.

Air Filters

Clean, purified air is one of the advantages of air conditioning. Every few minutes all air passes through these filters which remove at least 90 per cent of the dirt, dust, germs, bacteria and pollen.

Silent Blower

This powerful blower forces the conditioned air to every room, under pressure, regardless of wind and weather conditions, provides cooling ventilation in hot weather.
